DEAR DR. SUNDLOF,

7726 '99 APR 16 P1:59

I am writing to ask you to stop the drugging of farm animals with antibiotics to simply promote their rapid growth.

Better care of farm animals, instead of reliance on antibiotics is so much better! When animals are fed a nutritious diet and live in a healthy environment, growth promoters are not needed.

Antibiotic resistant germs are a serious and growing threat to human health.

Most of the antibiotics used on animals on factory farms have nothing to do with treating their illnesses.

There is increasing evidence that bacteria in animals become resistant to antibiotics they are given and that these bacteria infect humans through the meat, milk and eggs we eat. There is no treatment for people infected with antibiotic resistant bacteria.

As a new grandparent, I am not only concerned about my health, but my granddaughter, Emma.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Paula Bullinger
